Synopsis (700 Character Limit)

MOST BEAUTIFUL ISLAND is a psychological thriller examining the plight of undocumented female immigrants hoping to make a life in New York. Shot on Super 16 with an intimate, voyeuristic sensibility, MOST BEAUTIFUL ISLAND chronicles one harrowing day in the life of Luciana, a young immigrant woman struggling to make ends meet while striving to escape her past. As Luciana's day unfolds, she is whisked, physically and emotionally, through a series of troublesome, unforeseeable extremes. Before her day is done, she inadvertently finds herself a central participant in a cruel game. Lives are placed at risk, while psyches are twisted and broken for the perverse entertainment of a privileged few.

Director's Statement

Most Beautiful Island is an intimate exploration of solitude, identity and discovery. The story was drawn from my own experiences as a young Spanish immigrant in New York City. Like many other young Europeans, I wanted to live the American Dream, though precisely what that meant was not at all clear to me. As time passed and my meager savings rapidly expired, I found myself broke and alone in New York with an expired Visa, a very poor understanding of English and no prospects. A modeling agency agreed to sponsor me, and I spent the last of my money on the application fees. Over the ensuing months I learned to survive on bagels and random jobs as I waited for my Visa and a break. It was a desperate and vulnerable time emotionally and physically for me.

One day a woman called me and offered me a job for that evening; she had gotten my number through a girl I had recently met. The job seemed easy, I just had to attend a party dressed in a Halloween costume, and at the end of the evening I would be paid in cash. As the night progressed I realized that I was lied to—or, simply hadn't understood what the lady had said on the phone—and I found myself in a dangerous situation. What happened that night inspired me to write Most Beautiful Island.

While the story of Luciana's struggle and the life and death game in which she finds herself an unwilling participant are fictionalized, I wanted them to feel real and immediate to the viewer, much as my anxiety and vulnerability had felt to me in those trying times. For that reason, I chose to shoot the film mixing professional actors with non-actors in improvised and fluid scenarios. Two technical choices—working with super 16mm film, and shooting as much of the film as possible in single take scenes—also lend an intimacy, rawness and immediacy to the film that I feel convey the emotional and aesthetic condition of the protagonist's relationship to her novel and overwhelming surroundings. Adding to the sense of authenticity, real spiders were used under skilled supervision in the final scenes so that the actors had to confront their own very real anxieties about the animals. Underscoring and enhancing this sense of tension and immersion throughout is the spare score—composed mixing in the rich street sounds of New York City—that evolves with the character's perception and escalating anxiety in the film.

I have been an actor since I was a teenager in Spain and have always dreamt of directing film both as a form of expression and as a means of refining my craft as an actor. In 2011, I decided that the surest way to realize that dream was to write and finance my own independent project. It was then that I decided to draw on my own story and began writing Most Beautiful Island. The first draft of the script came together quickly and I decided to film one scene both as a proof of concept for my vision and as a fundraising tool. It was shot in one day in my apartment with friends donating their time, and was a critical step in the evolution of the project for a number of reasons. The footage was great and the flow of the final cut affirmed my vision for the project both aesthetically and conceptually. And, the positive reaction to the piece from trusted viewers gave me both confidence and the final push to pursue this very ambitious project as producer, lead actor and director. Shooting the single scene was also tremendously important, as it established look of the film with the cinematographer Noah Greenberg. With my script and scene completed, I began the laborious process of financing the film through private equity sources. After four years, I was finally able to secure the funding necessary to shoot a very streamlined version of my script—and, to do it on film, as I had always dreamt.

My biggest influences in filmmaking are John Cassavetes, the Dardenne brothers, Krzysztof Kieślowski, Andrea Arnold and, of particular influence on my thinking about Most Beautiful Island, Cristian Mungiu's Four Months, Three Weeks and Two Days. Their films are spare and intimate and create an entire world around the protagonist that is immediately gripping. With Most Beautiful Island, I am aspiring to express my own distinct voice in this same fashion—drawing on their inspiration, and channeling my own personal history and creative vision.
